When it comes to healthcare, choosing the right hospital can make all the difference. Unfortunately, not all hospitals are created equal, and some are considered to be the worst in terms of quality, safety, and value of care.

“For years, the medical industrialized complex consisting of hospitals, group purchasing organizations, and corrupt politicians have been saying that Americans have the best healthcare in the world,” stated Yisrael M Safeek, MD, MBA, CEO and Chairman of The SafeCare Group. “Yet, hospital care remains a nightmare for most Americans.”

“The wearing of masks, remote and distance care, and barriers to avoid cross contamination and spread of the COVID virus has steadily transformed into more emotionally distant care,”

Hospital administrators who pre-pandemic was seldom responsive to patient needs have altogether disappeared from the scene, including customer service representatives. In most cases, customer service at a majority of hospitals consists of the same cookbook message beginning with “we are sorry to hear” and ending with “you can email” or “you can call”. When the patient reaches out, 9 out of 10 times the hospital response does little to resolve the complaint and improve patient satisfaction.
